Abstract

Despite recent nationalistic political developments, themes of global health dominate the current and future public health agenda, e.g. climate change, financial crisis and global refugee migration. Since several years, Germany is opening up to the topic of global health. I would like to invite you to a scientific symposium on "Global health – Hot topics for the future". In this symposium renowned scholars from Germany and abroad will address hot topics that range from the global threat due to infectious diseases over population health effects of urbanisation to those of violence and the refugee crisis. In addition, young scholars will present innovative ideas for future research and interventions.

With you as a companion of my professional life I want to celebrate my transition from department chief to an active position as senior professor at the University of Bielefeld.

We are looking forward to a lively exchange and an exciting day.
